

GEN. HARRISON'S CAMPAIGN

At the retaking of Detroit, and the defeat of the army under Gen. Proctor, extracted from the "View of the N. W. Campaign," by Samuel R. Brown.

THE chagrin and disappointment, added to the serious loss of the fine army, under Gen. Hull, cast a temporary gloom over the whole union, but this sentiment soon subsided, and all felt the necessity of immediate action. Pennsylvania and Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio, all felt eager to wipe away the deep stain on our national character. Volunteers every where presented themselves, and but a short period elapsed before an army was ready, as if by magic, to retrieve the fortune of arms. A leader was wanting—all eyes looked with a common impulse upon the hero of TIPPECANOE; the united voice of the people of the west called on the Governor of Kentucky to dispense with all formalities, and General William Henry Harrison, was brevetted a major general, with directions to take command of the north-western army.

On the 3d of September, the Indians made a furious assault on Fort Harrison. They kept
