NOTE.—Except when constituting a part of the text of a message, the word "repeat" will never be used in radiotelephone communication since it has a distinct operational meaning to the British Army. For example, when used by the Royal Artillery, it means that the salvo last ordered will be fired again at the same range. The meaning of such other prescribed words or phrases as: How do you hear me? Speak more slowly. Wait. That is correct. Wrong, etc., which are also used in normal procedure, is self-evident.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington 25, D. C., 14 April 1944.

War Department Pamphlet No. 24-2 is published for the information of all concerned.
(AG 300.5 (23 Oct 43))
By order of the Secretary of War:

OFFICIAL:
J. A. ULIO,

Major General,
The Adjutant General.

Proper use of radiotelephone equipment, now widely distributed throughout the Army, is essential for effective radiotelephone communication. Failure to use correct procedure results in delay and inaccuracy and often gives valuable information to the enemy.

All officers and all enlisted men who use radiotelephone equipment will be required to become proficient in the use of the correct procedure. The Adjutant General will issue Circulars, FM 24-9, and Radiotelephone Procedure 23 December 1942. Appropriate commanders will prescribe such instruction and tests as will insure prompt compliance with this directive.

G. C. MARSHALL,
Chief of Staff.
